

Regular Attendance

A lot of research has been conducted into children's school attendance. There is no doubt that children who maintain regular attendance patterns are both socially and academically more successful than those with irregular or poor attendance.

Being in school helps children deal with the curriculum, which is carefully designed to support learning by its continual cycle of reinforcement and building new skills. Each lesson acting as the foundation for further learning and the development of 'fluency' and confidence in subject areas.

Missing lessons means missing out and falling behind other children.

Children missing more than 5% of the school year will be significantly disadvantaged as they are missing one in every twenty lessons.
